The Tariff and the West

In a speech on the sugar schedule in the Underwood tariff bill, Senator Francis G. Newlands of Nevada set forth what may fairly be taken as the western view of justice to Pacific coast industries in their relation to a government revenue.

Senator Newlands confined his argument almost entirely to the interest of the sugar beet growers. He explained how this great industry has grown up during the last eight or ten years, encouraged by the government with a moderate tariff, and how the raw sugar is one of the few products of the soil that can be shipped long distances because the whole value of the sugar beet can be compressed into one-sixth of its weight. The cultivation of the sugar beet may be classed among the infant industries, and therefore Senator Newlands argued that the reduction of the sugar should be gradual. He made no contention for the protective principle, but insisted that the true democratic principle is a tariff for revenue, and that the newer agricultural products of the far west should be put upon the free list while the older products of the middle west are put upon the dutiable list.

The oppressive features of protection have been fastened upon the country, says Senator Newlands, by creating a community of interest between the manufacturers on the one hand and the stockmen and farmers on the other. The exporting farmers have been made to believe that "a duty imposed upon the non-existent imports of farm products really protected them, and the democratic party in this bill is guilty of continuing that deception, and continuing it to the farmers of the middle west and south, while they deny a tariff which does involve an incidental protection to a struggling and an infant industry in the far west."

An ideal revision of the tariff, according to Senator Newlands, is:

"One that will involve a gradual cutting off of the high duties and a gradual reduction of existing duties to a level of about twenty-five percent and a gradual imposition of duties commencing at one percent upon the articles that are now on the free list."

Senator Newlands paid some attention to the political aspects of the case as well as to the economic. After emphasizing the fact that at the last election it was, after all, only a democratic minority that declared for a tariff for revenue, he said:

"There can be no question from the party votes and the party platforms that the tariff-for-revenue policy is not the most popular policy in this country. All the country declared for was a material reduction in the tariff. The west stood for that policy, and it stood against the exactions and the oppressions of the republican party. As the result of that propaganda, declared by the democratic party, the region west of the Missouri, which a few years ago only had one democratic senator, swept into the democratic ranks fourteen democratic senators."

"The democratic party has much to accomplish. It will take many years to accomplish what it has before it. Eight years of control at least are essential to put upon the statute books and in administration the reforms that it contemplates. The loss of four senators from the region west of the Missouri would turn the senate over to the control of our opponents, and democratic opportunity would be gone for years. We have today an overwhelming majority in the house of representatives but if you scan the returns you will see how narrow the margin was in many cases—pluralities, and small pluralities at that. Let this country drift during the next year into a period of depression and the great masses of the people will take their revenge upon the party in power. The voters are not all economists. They simply feel results. They do not reason out what causes the results, and they vote according to the results."

Incidentally, Mr. Newlands is apparently not one of those senators who need a special investigating committee to make known to them that a lobby exists in Washington when a tariff bill is before congress, for during his speech he casually remarked: "I have been in congress twenty years and have witnessed three or four revisions of the tariff. I have seen interested parties come here time after time and press their claims. I have seen organizations made, unions made, communities of interest established, by which oppressive rates have been maintained."

Nothing could better confirm the suspicions that the proposal to appoint a committee to investigate President Wilson's farming against the lobby is one of those monumental and perfunctory bluffs that is always made by well regulated statesmen when some one calls attention to an unpleasant but obvious fact.

The Festive Fly

"Swat the fly" crusades are now being conducted throughout the United States, but the fly season being somewhat late in Tonopah no attempt has been made toward exterminating the pest. During past years fly traps have been set out in front of the various mercantile establishments on the principal thoroughfares of this city and thousands of flies have been caught through this method. It is time that the same plan was put into execution for the festive fly is becoming quite active in our midst. Several years ago a number of fly traps were purchased by the county commissioners and distributed throughout the city. An effort should be made to locate the traps without delay.

A Physician's Faith In Eckman's Alternative

"Have used Eckman's Alternative in several cases of tubercular glands of the neck, with excellent results every time. In one case it cost me $50, for the girl was put on it only until she could arrange to be operated, and in a short time an operation was not needed. I suppose your records are just as fine as of old. You know my faith in it."

Original of this physician's letter on file. Eckman's Alternative is effective in other forms. Read what Mrs. Garvin says:

Idaho Falls, Idaho. "Gentlemen: I have gained twenty-two pounds since last February and my baby is in perfect health. I have been waiting since she was born to see how I would get along. I am now doing all my work, have been ever since she was four weeks old, and am steadily gaining. I do not cough or raise anything at all, so I think I am completely cured of lung trouble. (Affidavit) MRS. M. R. GARVIN. Note—Mrs. Garvin has seven children."

Eckman's Alternative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe throat and lung affections, bronchitis, bronchial asthma, stubborn colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa. for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.
